Regulation E refers to a set of federal rules that protect consumers who use electronic fund transfers (EFTs). As you probably gathered, the IRS now allows many taxpayers to file their taxes electronically via a process called e-filing. There are four different ways to e-file, though, and each one isn't for everybody. On the IRS website, the IRS itself offers free files and free fillable forms you can use. It also provides links to other companies' software programs that offer complete free e-filings on behalf of taxpayers who fit certain criteria; many taxpayers opt to e-file using commercial software like the programs from TurboTax and H&R Block. The fourth and final way to utilize the e-filing option is to file through a commercial e-file provider.
